

Meredith College Names First Provost

Meredith College has named Matthew Poslusny to serve as the College's first provost.

As senior vice president and provost Poslusny will lead the College's academic and enrollment initiatives, ensuring ongoing educational quality and student compatibility with Meredith's history while shaping its future.

Prior to joining Meredith College on July 1, Poslusny served as the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and dean of the common student experience at Widener University.

Poslusny's previous experience includes several years as Chair of the Chemistry Department at Marist College and Maier Endowed Chair of Environmental Science at the University of Charleston, Charleston, W.Va. His work has been published in both higher education and scientific journals.

Poslusny holds a Ph.D. in analytical chemistry from the University of North Texas.
